

Welcome, Class of Fall 2023

We welcomed 23 new Strategic Foresight students to our fall workshop, held at the beautiful Green Bay Botanical Garden – our biggest class yet. Collectively, they represent ten local organizations, some new to strategic foresight and others in training to enhance teams already established. Pictured in back on the far right is Garry Golden, certified futurist, who travels to Green Bay from New York City twice each year to train local organizations in the Greater Green Bay area.

Adding more foresight-trained employees to their rosters were Amerilux, Schneider National, Schreiber Foods, Green Bay Botanical Garden, and Bay Towel. The president of Bay Towel, Jake Butz, flew in from Utah to train with some of his employees.

The Salvation Army/Kroc Center sent a team of three to the training, and four members of the Dudley Birder Chorale entered the class. Also new to the program was Jane Benson of Main Jane Designs. And, of course, the new Executive Director of Envision Greater Green Bay, Alexa Naudziunas, was one of our students.

Four top administrators from the East De Pere School District joined the cohort, including the Superintendent, the Directors of both Elementary and Secondary Curriculum and Instruction, and the Director of Student Services.

Envision has now trained 143 leaders from 60+ local organizations (businesses, nonprofits, government and educational agencies) in Strategic Foresight. It is our vision to make Greater Green Bay the first community in the U.S. prepared to anticipate and lead change, applying strategic foresight to identify disruptors and shape a preferred future.
